... More positively, it contends that human dignity is the equal moral status possessed by all human beings simply in virtue of their possession of a human nature, and that so understood, it has an essential role to play in grounding human rights, but that it can only play this role in tandem with universal human interests. In particular, human dignity is central to explaining both why humans can possess rights and why these rights are resistant to trade-offs. Human Dignity and the Foundations of Human Rights by John ... The aim of this article is to give a new reconstruction of the conception of human dignity as a pre-associative yet legal status.
